徵稿啟事

The purpose of IFKAD 2021 is to understand the role of managing knowledge to support organisations to navigate uncertain times. The scale and variety of disruptions affecting businesses are unprecedented and astounding. Disruptions and overlapping crises threaten the working mechanisms of socio-cultural and economic-production ecosystems, and organisational systems are challenged to understand how they can be sustainable, keep moving forward and growing. The current coronavirus pandemic has brought to the fore a new level of uncertainty and poses difficult and even unprecedented challenges for the sustain-ability of organisations and communities.

During uncertain times organisational business models and traditional working mechanisms are at stake, and organisations must develop strategies and implement management initiatives to respond to the waves of disruptions impacting on their businesses.

The understanding of the strategies, projects and tools to manage the knowledge to navigate uncertain times is essential for survival and sustainability of any private, public and social organisation. The capacity of creating, employing and deploying knowledge is critical to protect the business and to guarantee that organisations can continuously contribute to the value creation dynamics of stakeholders' wealth creation.

Knowledge management is essential to drive organisations through the crisis. It can help to implement change management, to optimise operations, and most importantly, to support organisational learning mechanisms that can turn into innovations strengthening corporate systems of responding to a complex socio-economic landscape. The management and assessment of knowledge assets can drive the workplace protection ensuring employees safety and engagement to find new solutions. A knowledge-based view of the employment and deployment of new technologies can support smart working, the security of employees' expertise from dispersion, the creation of knowledge communities for innovation, the strengthening of social capital to face the psychological and sociological human tragedies. Knowledge management strategies play a central role in developing supply chains resilience and reorganise operations. The assessment and protection of intellectual capital are critical to reducing the risks of a financial downturn. Finally, knowledge-based strategies can help to maintain relationships with customers and key stakeholders.

At the 16th edition of IFKAD, we wish to extend our theories, findings and business discourses about the role and the dynamics of knowledge in the time of a growing level of uncertainty and to discuss to what extent the strategic knowledge management can support organisations to maintaining resilience, flexibility and agility for sustainable organisational value creation capacity.

We look for your contribution to make IFKAD 2021 the forum and the place to advance our understanding of how managing knowledge organisations can face business and socio-economic challenges. The multidisciplinary field of knowledge management can provide useful insights to help leaders and managers to think and rethink their organisations to equip them with a knowledge management capacity of effectively absorb and react to disruptions and crises.
